

PLUNGED KNIFE IN HEART OF MAN WHO SHOT ENEMY

Attacks on Old Fulton Market Pier Like Tragedy from Sicily.

VENDETTA AT AUCTION.

Brother-in-Law Gets Quick Revenge on "Big Tony" with Deadly Dagger.

BIG CROWD IN PURSUIT.

Trouble Began Over Auction of Fish-Man Wounded with Bullet Dying.

Rivalry among Italian fish peddlers led to a sensational double tragedy today on the old Fulton Market pier, Caradona, forty-five years old, of No. 17 Union street, Brooklyn, was shot dead last evening by his competitor, Giannamano, thirty-two years old, at No. 22 East Twenty-fourth street. Giannamano ran away after the shooting, but Giuseppe Tocco, a brother-in-law of one of the men, followed him and plunged a fish knife through the fleeing man's left shoulder until it pierced his heart. Giannamano dropped dead in his tracks.

Tocco drew the long-bladed knife from his victim's body and slammed it down on the sidewalk as Policeman Frank Grady nabbed him. He was not excited over his arrest; he is a Sicilian and it was natural for him to kill the man who had shot down his brother-in-law before his eyes.

Crowd Saw Stabbing.

The tragedy took place in the presence of several hundred Italian fish peddlers, who were so wrought up with excitement that they could not give the police the names of the victims. Tocco gave half a dozen names for his brother-in-law before he got the right one. Nobody could tell anything about the murdered Giannamano until his brother-in-law happened along. He was known to the other peddlers only as "Big Tony."

It is the habit of the Italian fish peddlers to gather on the old Fulton Market pier every morning and bargain for the fish that are left over and in danger of spoiling after the morning sales. A barrel of this fish was put up at auction to-day and caused spirited bidding. Caradona was the successful bidder over "Big Tony."

"I'll make you pay well for this," said the big Sicilian as he went away. Half an hour later as Caradona and Tocco sat side by side among a group of other peddlers on the pier Giannamano reappeared and without a word drew a big revolver and, walking up to Caradona, fired bullet into his left breast. Then he took it on the run. So did all the other Italians on the pier, and in their wild scramble they overturned many barrels of fish.

Fired and Missed.

Giannamano sped through Beekman Street and into Water street with Tocco brandishing a big fish knife at his heels and Policeman Grady and a crowd trailing behind. In Water street Giannamano turned and fired at Tocco, but missed him. Tocco didn't break his stride as the bullet whistled past his head, and as Giannamano turned into Peck's Slip he came up behind him, his knife high in air, brought it down with full force between the fugitive's shoulder-blades. The weapon went straight through Giannamano's heart. He sprawled out dead.

Meanwhile a crowd gathered about the dying man on the pier. Some one opened his shirt, exposing the gaping wound in his chest. The Italian dropped to his knees and patted his lips as the ghastly wound sucked it like a vampire until an American bystander pulled him away. The Italian explained that he had been shot in the back from the wound. Caradona was hurried to St. Gregory's Hospital where he died two hours later. The man hours to live. Giannamano's body was taken to the House of Relief and thence to the poor street station where Tocco was located.

Tocco was later arraigned before Magistrate Hessey in the Tombs Court and remanded him to the custody of the Coroner. He went to the office of the Coroner Acetelli to await the inquest.

THE TRAPS THAT PASS BY!

One should be as particular as to the sort of horse or carriage he buys as he is of the suit of clothes he wears. The world sees you at a glance and judges you accordingly. An attractive horse and carriage costs no more than the inferior sort if purchased through World's Best Directory.

GIRL'S FUNERAL IN WALL STREET STIRS BROKERS

Financiers and Lawyers Stand Uncovered as the White Hearse Passes.

Wall street paused in its pursuit of gold-to-day at an unusual sight—a little white casket being carried from the skyscraper at No. 60 Wall street, before which stood a white hearse and some carriages. A funeral in Wall street was strange enough, and a child's funeral seemed out of place there. But there were brokers and lawyers and clerks standing with uncovered heads as the little casket passed, for tiny, golden-haired Elsie Taylor's seventy-day night with death was over.

The little flame of life that had been flickering so faintly for months went quietly out yesterday. To Supt. Taylor, of the building, and to his wife it was a mercy to have their little one slip free from the twisting tortures of spasmodic meningitis. To the doctors who called at the Taylors' living rooms on the top floor of the 365-foot building, the little girl was a marvel of the medical world. For seventy days the six-year-old mite had struggled in the clutches of the disease before she succumbed.

To the parents and to the brokers it meant that the little sunshine of the big building had expired. The little blue-eyed, golden-haired romp, whose presence in the hallways had raised the human touch to this temple raised to money-making had died and the brokers, lawyers and clerks did not regard it as a medical and scientific case, but as a sad little human phase. And when the small white casket passed through the marble hallway, P. A. Valentine, Theodore Price and other well-known brokers removed their hats and stood uncovered.

It was on May 1 that Elsie Taylor was seized with meningitis. She was in school at the time and they bore the convulsing little form to the girl's home on top of the Wall street skyscraper.

Supt. Taylor with stiff upper lip went about his daily routine stoically hiding all news of his daughter's illness. But the brokers who had been used to seeing the little girl in the hall after a little while missed her and asked where she was. There were heavy hearts and subdued tones to-day when an elevator carried down the little casket and the little sunshines went out forever.

BRIDE TURNED ON GAS TO KILL SELF

She was unconscious from the hospital, but when Dr. Adams reached the house the woman was dead. She had been ill and died suddenly.

ICE WAGON HORSE IN A WILD RUNAWAY

Knocks Down Street Cleaner and Ends by Colliding with Piano Truck.

A horse, crazed by the heat, ran six blocks on One Hundred and Twenty-sixth street this afternoon with the driver tugging at the lines and an eleven-year-old boy clinging pluckily to the seat. Timothy Ryan, a street-cleaner, was knocked down and injured so badly about the head that he was taken to Harlem Hospital. The horse ended his race by running against a piano wagon near Lenox avenue.

The owner, Charles Bissel, an ice dealer, of No. 126 Washington avenue, was on the seat with Little Alfred Hill and was bound up Third avenue to get a load of ice. At One Hundred and Twenty-sixth street the horse suddenly turned and ran west. Mr. Bissel tugged at the lines, but was powerless. At Park Avenue—the horse narrowly missed hitting a street car, and scattered a crowd of passengers.

A bicycle policeman, Ajax Whitman, the strong man of the department, gave chase on his wheel and was almost run over when Ryan was knocked down. After the horses burst into the piano wagon Whitman seized him as he stumbled and controlled him.

Schnaing So Described Mrs. Walther, and She Wants His Life Insurance.

Elliott Also Charged by Father with Stealing Jewelry.

Can a married woman become the "affianced bride" of another man while her husband is living? This was the question before Judge F. V. Stein in the Bronx Supreme Court to-day. Mrs. Martha Schneising, who was suing against the Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Association, claimed that her husband, John V. Schneising, who formerly lived at the Walther home, Schneising named his beneficiary as "Mrs. Martha Schneising." The association refused to pay. The Judge decided to take a few days to think over the matter.

His father declares the boy has been wild and that he tried to get him into the bad company, and collected it.
